Technical information

Mounting options:

There are three basic mounting options.

Full overlay:

This is where the door is positioned in front of the cabinet side panel, with only a small gap remaining at the side to provide the space necessary for the door to open reliably.

Half overlay:

This is where two doors are positioned in front of a cabinet centre panel, with the required overall reveal between them. In other words, each door has a reduced overlay. Cranked hinges are used.

Inset:

This is where the door is positioned inside the cabinet, i.e. next to the cabinet side panel. Here too, a gap is needed so that the door can open reliably. Highly cranked hinges are used here.

Minimum door reveal:

The minimum reveal, also known as door clearance or minimum clearance, is the space required at the side for opening a door.

The amount of door clearance depends on cup distance C, door thickness and the type of hinge selected. Radii on the door edges reduce the minimum clearance.

The required minimum reveal is shown in the table for the respective hinge types.

For half-overlay applications, the total reveal selected between the doors must be at least twice the door clearance. Both doors can then be opened at the same time.

Cup distance C:

Cup distance C is the distance between door edge and the edge of the cup drilling. Resulting from the type of door movement, the maximum cup distance depends on the specific hinge type. The greater the distance selected for cup distance C, the smaller door clearance will be, i.e. the minimum reveal required.

Door overlay:

Door overlay, or overlay A, is the distance by which the door extends beyond the cabinet side.

Reveal F:

The reveal is the distance from the outer edge of the door to the outer side of the cabinet in the case of full overlay applications, and the distance between two doors in the case of half-overlay applications. With the inset door, the reveal is the distance from the outer edge of the door to the inside of the cabinet side panel.

Number of hinges per door:

Door width, height and weight as well as the material quality of the door are decisive factors in determining the number of hinges required. The factors encountered in practice differ widely from case to case. For this reason, the number of hinges specified in the diagram must be understood as a guide only. If in doubt, it is recommended to carry out a trial door mounting.

For reasons of stability, the distance between the hinges must always be made as large as possible.
